The above-mentioned shortcomings were found to be related to the fact that most authors concentrating on community fighting often give little attention to the role of individuals and to the social norms governing their behaviour. This is especially true of the studies of the 1970s and 1980s, which were dominated by the idea of the community as a whole. The authors of the present study have taken account of the role of individuals and of the social norms governing their behaviour.

Suppose we have a set of data points (x_i, y_i) for $i = 1, 2, \dots, n$. We want to find a line of best fit, which is a line that passes through the points as closely as possible. The line of best fit is the line that minimizes the sum of the squares of the residuals, which are the vertical distances between the points and the line. The equation of the line of best fit is given by $y = mx + b$, where m is the slope and b is the y-intercept. The slope m is calculated as $m = \frac{\sum (x_i - \bar{x})(y_i - \bar{y})}{\sum (x_i - \bar{x})^2}$, and the y-intercept b is calculated as $b = \bar{y} - m\bar{x}$, where $\bar{x}$ and $\bar{y}$ are the means of the x and y values, respectively.

There were no data available from the Department of Health, Community Services and the Environment on the number of people who had been vaccinated against hepatitis B.

When participants with increased susceptibility within their first degree relatives were reassessed with regard to smoking, susceptibility again was not significantly elevated. Thus, the elevated susceptibility that first degree relatives have is not necessarily heritable.
