

Proclaiming Life in Death: The Funeral Sermon

Donald L. Deffen

A young pastor went home for lunch to find his wife raped and strangled, his two toddlers left unharmed. "Monique's sleeping upstairs, Daddy," they told him. "A man came to the house." Later the grieving father appeared on television, saying that he had forgiven his wife's murderer and asking others to find it in their hearts to do so too.

The funeral service was characterized by a sense of the victory of Easter. The bulletin stated the following:

The black border around this paper is not only for the memory of Sharon or for the grief of her loved ones, but for a sick humanity. All of us have felt in these days something of the terrible misery of what it means to be human. For a short time the mask was stripped away, and we caught a glimpse of the hell in human hearts—the hell of lovelessness, of hatred, of malice toward other people, of our ready willingness to consume each other.

But it is precisely at this point—at graveside—that Christianity, if it is to have any meaning at all, must begin to make sense. For it was in the very depths of this tragic human existence that God came personally in Jesus Christ. And it was here that He redeemed us and our existence.

The mercy is this, that we who have faced our humanity in all its horror are now enabled through Christ to realize our humanity in all its glory, the glory of love.

There was a quite different funeral service which took place some fifty years ago. As a Lutheran left the funeral service of her father, she overheard a Methodist friend say: "What a sermon! All about sin and death! That man must have been a great sinner!" The man being buried had, in fact, been a devout and loving Christian. The exact religious background of his daughter's friends—and what they actually heard at that funeral—cannot be ascertained at this point in time.

In any case, however, this episode and the episode recounted before it indicate the crucial nature of what people hear, especially
