Looking more carefully at the rocks and stones around him, he discovered several more. When he returned home he made a case to display his fossils, using an empty box and a square piece of glass that he found in his father's workshop. People used to ask Dr Jackson if he would stop searching when his collection was complete. He said that was impossible, because there was an infinite number of fossils in the world. He would continue searching until he was too old and weak to travel. Unfortunately, on his final trip to Africa, he contracted a fatal illness and died soon after his return.
