Rows - Answer Data points are values in data tables

Columns - Answer The 'answer' for each data point (response/outcome)

Structured Data - Answer Quantitative, Categorical, Binary, Unrelated, Time Series

Unstructured Data - Answer Text

Support Vector Model - Answer Supervised machine learning algorithm used for both classification and regression challenges.
Mostly used in classification problems by plotting each data item as a point in n -dimensional space (n is the number of features you have) with the value of each feature being the value of a particular coordinate.
Then you classify by finding a hyperplane that differentiates the 2 classes very well.
Support vectors are simply the coordinates of individual observation -- it best segregates the two classes (hyperplane / line).

What do you want to find with a SVM model? - Answer Find values of $a_0, a_1, \dots, a_m$ that classifies the points correctly and has the maximum gap or margin between the parallel lines.

What should the sum of the green points in a SVM model be? - Answer The sum of green points should be greater than or equal to 1

What should the sum of the red points in a SVM model be? - Answer The sum of red points should be less than or equal to -1

What should the total sum of green and red points be? - Answer The total sum of all green and red points should be equal to or greater than 1 because y_j is 1 for green and -1 for red.

First principal component - Answer PCA -- a linear combination of original predictor variables which captures the maximum variance in the data set. It determines the direction of highest variability in the data. Larger the variability captured in first component, larger the information captured by component. No other component can have variability higher than first principal component.
It minimizes the sum of squared distance between a data point and the line.

Second principal component - Answer PCA -- also a linear combination of original predictors which captures the remaining variance in the data set and is uncorrelated
