When systems are connected by the left anterior cingulate, the capacity for the brain to be able to regulate itself is reduced. The brain is not able to regulate itself in the face of environmental or emotional transgressions. The next step in using neuroimaging is to attempt to identify which other brain regions are involved in the regulation of the left anterior cingulate, and to determine how these regions are connected to the anterior cingulate by itself. It is by recognizing the importance of a sophisticated analysis of the current state of affairs that we can begin to develop a vision of the future. This is the first step in the process of strategic planning. It is a process that is both iterative and dynamic, and it is one that requires the active participation of all stakeholders. The process begins with a thorough analysis of the current state of affairs, which is followed by a vision of the future. This vision is then translated into a set of strategic objectives, which are then used to develop a strategic plan. The plan is then implemented, and the process is repeated as needed.
