This information paper is designed to resolve the confusion between the Universal Transverse Mercator (UTM) and the Military Grid Reference System (MGRS) coordinates. The two systems are often used interchangeably, but they are not the same. Most of our allies, intelligence databases, and many software packages use the UTM system. The Army and Marine Corps proposed the MGRS conversion to simplify coordinate exchange for the soldier/marine in the field. The aim of this paper is for users to understand both the UTM and MGRS systems and to able pull coordinates on multiple scales of maps and charts.

Universal Transverse Mercator Grid

The UTM projection transforms our three-dimensional world into a two dimensional system that allows cartographers and map users to measure distances, angles, and areas accurately. The UTM system divides the world into 60 numbered (1-60) zones with each zone being 6° wide in longitude. The 60 zones begin counting at 1 from the International Date Line, at 180° West longitude (located between Alaska and Russia), to 30 at the Prime Meridian (Greenwich, England), and up to 60 back to the International Date Line. The UTM projection loses the qualities of distortion protection once we go near the north and south poles. For this reason UTM is valid for areas on the earth from 84° N to 80° S. The polar regions, areas between 84° N to 90° N and 80° S to 90° S, are portrayed on maps and charts using the Universal Polar Stereographic (UPS) projection. The UPS projection is used to avoid the convergence of the longitudinal lines outside of the designated area of the UTM projection.

Grid Zone Designations of the UTM Coordinate Systems

UTM coordinates for a location are determined in a multi-step process. First the user must find the proper UTM zone in which the position is located. The UTM zone number is located in the margin of large-scale maps (TUM, JOG), and in the printed area on medium-scale (TPC/CHC) aeronautical charts. Next the user should designate whether the location is in the Northern or Southern Hemisphere. This is an important point because a UTM coordinate can work in both the Northern and Southern Hemispheres.

Next, the position is specified within the zone using a X, Y or Easting and Northing grid system. UTM Coordinates are always read right and up resulting in Easting and Northing values in meters. The Easting is always a six digit value while the Northing figure is almost always a seven digit value (near the equator there may be less than seven, but most systems will want you to provide a six digit coordinate with a zero). In the Northern Hemisphere Northing values are determined by counting the number of meters that the location lies north of the equator. For areas in the southern hemisphere the Northing values start at 10,000,000 meters North of the equator and count down. For example a location 7 meter south of the
