Abstract: Foreign Direct Investment is a driving factor for developing economies. There are several other factors also that significantly impact Foreign Direct Investment. This study aims to critically analyze the previous studies on factors acting as potential determinants of Foreign Direct Investment. This study proceeds with drawing a broad overview of Foreign Direct Investment determinants on the basis of relevant theories of FDI. Further, the specific determinants are identified and critically reviewed on the basis of available literature. The dynamics of these determinants have changed considerably in the context of pandemic. The study also attempts to draw conclusions regarding the effectiveness of these determinants in the current scenario. This study identifies Market Size, Openness to Trade, Labour Cost, Infrastructure and Political Risk as the most common potential determinants constructively or negatively associated with FDI.

Keywords: Foreign Direct Investment, potential determinants, pandemic, developing economies

I INTRODUCTION

Investment plays a major role in the evolution of the economy from both social and economic aspects. Numerous developing economies had imposed trade restrictions and control on foreign capital in order to shield the domestic industries from being dominated by their foreign competitors (de Mello, 1997; Dupasquier and Osakwe, 2006). These policies negatively affected the yield from capital invested thereby reducing FDI inflows into the specific countries (de Mello, 1997) and hindered future prospects from economic perspective (Rodrik, 1998). A feasible alternative was to seek debt in the form of loans from banks. However, the year of 1980 faced scarcity in lending activities of commercial banks which created a scarcity of debt, this diverted the attention of economies towards Foreign Direct Investment to capture more funds (Ancharaz, 2003). Foreign Direct Investment inflows yield benefits for both the home country and the investing country. It is a general opinion and a proven fact that Foreign Direct is significant from statistical point of view in augmenting the improvement and future prospects of developing and transition economies (Acaravi and Ozturk, 2012; Mehic et al., 2013). From the perspective of developing economies, looking abroad for investments provides a sound financial backing. Investment procured from foreign sources is helpful in employment generation and creates spillover effects causing value added benefits for the host countries. In these economies, developments are still going on thereby augmenting the development process.

Foreign Direct Investment inflows had picked up a growth momentum in 2021 globally, but the global environment witnessed tremendous changes in 2022 while the world was still on the path of recovery from the pandemic. The pandemic and pandemic led consequences, most importantly the disruption in Global Value Chains and economic situation has caused significant impact on the factors determining Foreign Direct Investment inflows to a large extent.

There are various factors that play a determining role in quantum of FDI inflows which are termed as determinants. The significant factors in defining the foreign capital flow can be in the form of government interventions, economy in availability of labour, taxes, offers and incentives etc. A report by the Asian Development Bank (2004), states that there are different factors playing an active role and the role of a catalyst as well in augmenting Foreign Direct Investment inflows. These factors consist of setting up of more MNCs, logistics and tax relaxations offered by countries.

In a scenario where globalization has become the backbone of international trade, the relevance of FDI is undisputed. FDI is one of the most accessible and feasible ways to procure foreign capital, therefore, gaining clarity regarding the forms through which FDI can be procured is very significant. It is pertinent to identify the factors affecting FDI and understand their dynamics. With this perspective, this study focuses on seeking answer to the question, "What are the potential determinants affecting Foreign Direct Inflows in the present context?" Given an extensive and vast literature on Foreign Direct Investment determinants which aid as evidence for different factors, these variables tend to change their dynamics over time. Regarding the present scenario, the world is still reeling from the effects of pandemic.

Foreign Direct Investment and Human Development Olivier de Schutter,Johan F. M. Swinnen,Jan Wouters,2013
This book presents original research that examines the growth of international investment agreements as a means to attract foreign direct investment FDI and considers how this affects the ability of capital importing countries to pursue their development goals The hope of countries signing such treaties is that foreign capital will accelerate transfers of technologies create employment and benefit the local economy through various types of linkages But do international investment agreements in fact succeed in attracting foreign direct investment And if so are the sovereignty costs involved worth paying In particular are these costs such that they risk undermining the very purpose of attracting investors which is to promote human development in the host country This book uses both economic and legal analysis to answer these questions that have become central to discussions on the impact of economic globalization on human rights and human development It explains the dangers of developing countries being tempted to signal their willingness to attract investors by providing far reaching protections to investors rights that would annul or at least seriously diminish the benefits they have a right to expect from the arrival of FDI It examines a variety of tools that could be used by capital exporting countries and by capital importing countries alike to ensure that FDI works for development and that international investment agreements contribute to that end This uniquely interdisciplinary study located at the intersection of development economics international investment law and international human rights is written in an accessible language and should attract the attention of anyone who cares about the role of private investment in supporting the efforts of poor countries to climb up the development ladder

Multinational Enterprises, Foreign Direct Investment and Growth in Africa Bernard Michael Gilroy, Thomas Gries, Willem A. Naudé, 2006-03-30 How can Africa the world's most lagging region benefit from globalisation and achieve sustained economic growth Africa needs greater investment by Multinational Enterprises MNEs to improve competitiveness and generate more growth through positive spill over effects Despite the fact that Africa's returns on investment averaged 29% since 1990 Africa has gained merely 1% of global Foreign Direct Investment FDI flows The challenge for African countries is how to be a more desirable destination for FDI The study integrates three currents of economic research namely from the literature on endogenous economic growth convergence and regional integration the explanations for Africa's poor growth and the growing understanding of the role of MNEs in a global economy The empirical side of the book is based on an econometric study of the determinants of FDI in Africa as well as a detailed firm level survey conducted in 2000 Foreign Direct Investment and Economic Development in Africa Hugh Dang, Gaston Gohou, Hugues Kouadio, 2019-01-17 This book explores several aspects of foreign direct investment FDI and their linkages to African economies It will appeal to policy makers development agency professionals and researchers based as it is on stylized facts and rigorous analytical studies The reader will find state of the art analyses on FDI related topics throughout the chapters Policy makers and development professionals will find in this book a useful guide to draw sound policies based on facts and rigorous analyses The Effect of Treaties on Foreign Direct Investment Karl P Sauvant, Lisa E Sachs, 2009-03-27 Over the past twenty years foreign direct investments have spurred widespread liberalization of the foreign direct investment FDI regulatory framework By opening up to foreign investors and encouraging FDI which could result in increased capital and market access many countries have improved the operational conditions for foreign affiliates and strengthened standards of treatment and protection By assuring investors that their investment will be legally protected with closed bilateral investment treaties BITs and double taxation treaties DTTs this in turn creates greater interest in FDI Foreign Direct Investment and International Law Adaeze Agatha Aniodoh, 2025-07-16 This book examines the regulatory framework for foreign direct investments most notably the bilateral investment treaties which provide several guarantees that minimise the exposure of risks to foreign investors in a host State Most States have recognised that one of the ways they can improve their economic growth is by providing effective mechanisms for the attraction of foreign investments In this regard foreign direct investments have become a key element in the strategic vision for advancing any national economy The book examines guarantees which have the capacity to impinge on the economic sovereignty of a State raising questions such as are host States obliged to comply with the rights of foreign investors to free capital repatriation in the face of economic difficulties What power does a host State have to regulate and impose capital controls that are deleterious to the rights of a foreign investor This book argues that policies aimed at increasing foreign direct investment need to extend beyond investment liberalisation to strike a balance between the regulatory rights of a State and the legitimate expectations of foreign investors Advancing the discussion on the necessity of balancing the needs of foreign investors with those of the host community and exploring the power asymmetry present in treaty negotiations this book will be of interest to students academics and practitioners with an interest in international investment law
