

Divine Command Theory

I. God as the origin and regulator of morality

Morality is determined by God

The commands are usually found in sacred texts. Frankena 'the standard of right and wrong is the will or law of God.' For example -

II. Right and wrong as objective truths based on God's will

Morality is not influenced by personal choices and humans have no moral authority only God

William of Ockham
'With Him a thing becomes right solely because He wants it so.'

III. Moral goodness is achieved by complying with divine command

The only way to be morally good is to follow God's command e.g.

Punishment for those who don't and reward for those who do. Grayling (page 4)

IV. Divine command as a requirement of God's omnipotence

DCT is a natural consequence of God's omnipotence – this means God has power over everything – otherwise there would be something else more powerful

V. Divine command as an objective metaphysical foundation of morality

Objective – moral facts

Metaphysical – what lies beyond the physical world – not testable

Divine Command Theory And Moral Obligations Tyler Journeaux

John E. Hare

Divine Command Theory And Moral Obligations Tyler Journeaux:

God's Command John E. Hare, 2015-10-29 This work focuses on divine command and in particular the theory that what makes something obligatory is that God commands it and what makes something wrong is that God commands us not to do it. Focusing on the Abrahamic faiths, eminent scholar John E. Hare explains that two experiences have had to be integrated. The first is that God tells us to do something or not to do something. The second is that we have to work out ourselves what to do and what not to do. The difficulty has come in establishing the proper relation between them. In Christian reflection on this, two main traditions have emerged: divine command theory and natural law theory. Hare successfully defends a version of divine command theory but also shows that there is considerable overlap with some versions of natural law theory. He engages with a number of Christian theologians, particularly Karl Barth, and extends into a discussion of divine command within Judaism and Islam. The work concludes by examining recent work in evolutionary psychology and argues that thinking of our moral obligations as produced by divine command offers us some help in seeing how a moral conscience could develop in a way that is evolutionarily stable.

Persistent Problems in Modified Divine Command Theory Brandon Trey Jackson, 2017 I argue that there are persistent problems in contemporary modifications of divine command theory. Divine command theory states that God's commands are moral obligations only because he commands them. Modified divine command theories attempt to add to or amend the justification for God's commands being moral obligations. The problem is that they aren't successful at escaping the Euthyphro dilemma, which states the following of God's commands: they are either a moral obligation because they are commanded by God, or they are commanded by God because they are moral obligations. Modified divine command theories attempt to navigate between these two alternatives but they fail to do so successfully. This becomes evident when we see how these theories solve what I will call the arbitrary worry: the worry that on divine command theory we have no guarantee that God's commands will not be arbitrary or worse, despotic. Two contemporary attempts to modify divine command theory show this to be the case: Robert Adams' Finite and Infinite Goods and Linda Zagzebski's Divine Motivation Theory. Adams solves the worry by positing that God must be loving to issue obligatory commands; however, in doing so, he posits value independent of God, namely the value of relationships and lovingness. Zagzebski solves the worry by positing that God's nature, and thus his motivations, are good, which generate our obligations. However, she identifies goodness only with whatever God's nature happens to be meaning that whatever motivations he is capable of having will generate obligation for us, and we don't know the extent of his nature or what motivations he is capable of having. Adams thus lands on the second horn of the dilemma, and Zagzebski on the first. The God who Commands Richard J. Mouw, 1990 In this book, Richard Mouw probes from a Calvinist tradition the place of obedience to a divine command. He suggests that a Calvinist perspective on moral theology can profit from an openness to some contemporary developments, particularly narrativist ethics and feminist thought.

Divine Command Theory

Christopher S. Meyer, 2019 This thesis defends John Danaher's version of the Epistemological Objection to Divine Command Theory (DCT). This objection asserts that DCT fails as a metaethical theory of moral obligation due to the fact that there is a group of persons, reasonable nonbelievers, who have knowledge of moral obligations while lacking the knowledge of divine commands required in DCT. The first part of this thesis focuses on this objection and explains how it applies to DCT. An underlying assumption of Danaher's defense is the existence of reasonable nonbelievers: persons who do not violate epistemic duties in their nonbelief. The latter portion of this thesis defends the existence of such persons by considering and responding to the challenge that all nonbelievers violate at least one epistemic duty since their nonbelief is the product of the culture in which they are immersed, as opposed to rationally informed inquiry. In response to this challenge, it is shown that the existence of reasonable nonbelievers is the default position and that the burden of proof is on those claiming all nonbelief is unreasonable.
