

Using Neuroscience to Understand the Role of Direct Mail

Business Challenge Virtual media has experienced explosive growth in recent years, while physical media, such as print and direct mail, has declined. The UK's Royal Mail wanted to understand whether there are any differences in the communications effectiveness of physical and virtual media.

Our Response

We decided to investigate how the brain processes physical marketing materials, such as direct mail, compared to virtual (or digital) materials presented on a screen. Given the learning from other forms of advertising research about the importance of emotion in driving marketing success, there was particular interest in understanding the emotional processing evoked by the different forms of media.

Working in collaboration with the Centre for Experimental Consumer Psychology at Bangor University, we used functional Magnetic Resonance Imagery (fMRI) scanning to understand how the brain reacts to physical and virtual stimuli. fMRI allows us to look directly at brain activity and so see the brain regions most involved in processing advertising. These include quite subtle processes that respondents can find hard to articulate verbally or which may be unavailable to introspection and so could be missed by conventional research.

This research strongly suggests that greater emotional processing is facilitated by the physical material than the virtual.

During the research, 20 participants were shown both ads that were already in the market, and an equal quantity of "scrambled" images (which were used as control to allow for the fact that the the physical material stimulates more than one sense).

The same material was shown on-screen (to produce the online, virtual experience) and printed on cards (to produce the physical experience). While participants interacted with the material, brain scans were used to assess how the processing of marketing messages was affected by the medium of presentation.

Millward Brown Case Study:

Case-Study-Guide Amir A. Hashmi, 2012-03-15 Dieses Werk befasst sich mit der Bearbeitung von Case Studies wie sie für die betriebswirtschaftliche Aus- und Weiterbildung an internationalen Business Schools beispielsweise der weithin bekannten Harvard Business School typisch sind. An klassischen deutschen Universitäten und Fachhochschulen finden solche Case Studies vom Harvard Typ nur zu geringem Einsatz. Insbesondere fehlt es im deutschsprachigen Raum an einschlägigen Fach- und Lehrbüchern, die sich mit der Bearbeitung solcher Case Studies in wirtschaftswissenschaftlichen Lehrveranstaltungen intensiv befassen. Das hier vorgelegte Werk zielt darauf ab, diese Lücke zu schließen. In erster Linie wendet sich dieses Werk an die Zielgruppe von Studierenden der Betriebswirtschaftslehre und benachbarter wirtschaftswissenschaftlicher Studiengänge wie etwa Wirtschaftsinformatik, Volkswirtschaftslehre, Medizinmanagement und Lehramt mit wirtschaftswissenschaftlicher Ausrichtung. Als zweite Zielgruppe sollen sich auch Hochschulabsolventen angesprochen fühlen, die sich am Abschluss ihres Studiums in das Berufsleben auf Assessment Center vorbereiten müssen, in denen heutzutage immer häufiger die Bearbeitung und Präsentation kleiner Case Studies verlangt wird. Eine dritte Zielgruppe bilden Profis aus der betrieblichen Praxis, die sich beispielsweise in Unternehmensberatungen auch in ihrer täglichen Arbeit mit komplexen Case Studies auseinandersetzen.
