Abstract

An earth tremor of July 30, 2016 occurred with magnitude of 2.6 and intensity of III at Kwoi and Ikara Local Governments. This led to look thoroughly at the possibility of designing stable structures in this region. The static analysis of RC structures has been carried out so as to understand on the response of buildings to any seismic excitations in the region. The main aim of this paper is to investigate the behaviour of multi-storey building under earthquake excitation. To evaluate the performance of multi-storey building under seismic excitation, a static pushover analysis has been conducted using MIDAS GEN. A three-dimensional model of the structure was created to undertake the non-linear analysis. The properties (section and material) of the model are assigned. After this, the static analysis is performed followed by the displacement-controlled pushover analysis. The pushover analysis was carried out by subjecting the structural frame to lateral load which is equivalent to the inertia forces from earthquake. The capacity curve obtained from the pushover analysis of the building was found to meet the demand curve near the elastic range at a displacement of 0.042m showing a good resistance to a spectrum acceleration of 0.16g. The obtained results show that the structure can resist earthquakes of moderate magnitude and intensity.
