Abstract

Religiosity, spirituality, and adolescents' self-adjustment. The objective of this study is to test the correlation among religiosity, spirituality and adolescents' self-adjustment. A quantitative approach was employed in this study. Data were collected from 476 junior high schools students of 13 State Junior High Schools and one Junior High School Muhammadiyah in Magelang city. Data were collected using religiosity, spirituality and adolescents' self-adjustment questionnaires. The results of this research showed that there is a significant correlation between religiosity, spirituality, and adolescents' self-adjustment and there are some differences between male and female adolescents' self-adjustment.

Keywords: religiosity, spirituality, adolescents' self-adjustment

1. Introduction

The development of modern societies causes increasing competitions. The development is due to a rapid expansion of information technology, especially the development and the use of internet. Wallace (1999) suggests that the internet booming happens too quickly, and we do not have time to retreat and to see systematically the new environment that gives strong influences on behavior. Internet has created a new environment, a place where human beings make actions and interactions.

Increasing competition demands each person to continually make self-adjustments. R. Scott and W. Scott (1998) states that one of the main hindrances in facing life in the society with advanced technology is a need to adjust oneself to any variations that may result in conflicts in families, friendships, work groups or schools. Therefore, self-adjustment should be made by everyone, including adolescents. This self-adjustment among adolescents is not an easy task to do, since adolescents should make adjustments to themselves and their environment. Some adolescents are successful in the adjustments, but some fail.

Masngudin (2004) studied the correlation between juvenile delinquency as one of deviating behaviors and social functioning of families of Pondok Pinang. He reported that the forms of the juvenile delinquency are as follows: telling lie, going out without permission, gadding, staying up and talking all night, playing truant, fighting with school mates, fighting with students from other schools, throwing trash anywhere, reading pornography books, watching pornography films, driving motorcycles/cars without driving licenses, driving at excessive speed, living together (out of matrimony), free sex, stealing, picking pocket, committing armed robbery, abortion, rapping, gambling, narcotics misuse, killing. The results of the research show that the forms of juvenile delinquency in Pondok Pinang Jakarta are various, from minor delinquency to crimes made by the adolescents.

Santoso (2000) reported his results of research on adolescents at the age of 13-19 years who were still studying at schools and who dropped out, but unmarried, in East Java (Bandung and Cianjur) and Bali provinces (Denpasar and Gianyar). The data on the forms of juvenile delinquency are as follows: driving motorcycles/cars at excessive speed, playing truant, going out without parents' permission, wall-scratching, extortion, stealing, and building destroying. The research results of Masngudin (2004) and Santoso (2000) showed that there are many adolescents who fail to make adjustments.

Success and failure in such adjustments may be influenced by various factors, among others, growing hedonistic behavior, praising worldly materials, developing individualistic attitudes, and low religiosity and spirituality. Therefore, the researchers are interested in making a research on the contribution of religiosity and spirituality to self-adjustment.
