

Logical Fallacies

Logical fallacies involve errors in reasoning. They often result in flawed conclusions that are based on faulty or irrelevant arguments.

Fallacy of Reductio ad Ignorantiam – arguments based on a lack of evidence or knowledge rather than on positive evidence.

1. It is because we have no evidence that the people who voted the opposing candidate better than the person that I voted for, therefore, the person I voted for must be the better person.
  - Example: The person that voted for me is a better person because he has more friends and a bigger car. This is not a logical argument.
  - Tip: Do not make a claim that is based on a lack of evidence. It is better to say that you have no evidence than to say that you are right.
2. All people that are not good are bad. Therefore, if you are not good, you are bad.
  - Example: The person that is not good is bad. Therefore, if you are not good, you are bad.
  - Tip: Do not make a claim that is based on a lack of evidence. It is better to say that you have no evidence than to say that you are right.
3. It is not true that the candidate that I voted for is better than the person that I voted for. Therefore, the candidate that I voted for is better than the person that I voted for.
  - Example: The person that I voted for is better than the person that I voted for. Therefore, the candidate that I voted for is better than the person that I voted for.
  - Tip: Do not make a claim that is based on a lack of evidence. It is better to say that you have no evidence than to say that you are right.
4. Because the candidate that I voted for is better than the person that I voted for, therefore, the candidate that I voted for is better than the person that I voted for.
  - Example: The person that I voted for is better than the person that I voted for. Therefore, the candidate that I voted for is better than the person that I voted for.
