operationalised in a healthcare context Malin Wiger, 2018-05-14 Healthcare improvements are constantly relevant and an important topic. Healthcare is frequently being called upon to be more cost-efficient and still fulfil demands regarding waiting times, quality, and availability. Experience from structural changes in other contexts gives reason to be positive about the potential for logistics improvements in the healthcare sector as well. From a logistics perspective, patients pass different care functions, units, organisations, and health facilities. It is assumed that logistics management knowledge applied in healthcare can lead to lower costs, shorter waiting times, better patient service, shorter treatment times, and increased capacity. This dissertation therefore presents an exploration of how logistics management theories can be operationalised in a healthcare context to understand care chain effectiveness. Theoretically, the operationalisation is done by systems theory, creating compatibility between logistics management theories and the healthcare context. As a first step, features for a logistics system are identified. Features for achieving care chain effectiveness are thus a desired condition, and the care delivery system is the tool to achieve it. As the final step in the operationalisation, the features for care chain effectiveness are in turn used to analyse today's practices. Empirically, the research is based on qualitative data from a single case study with multiple units of analysis. It includes four care units at one of Sweden's university hospitals where the data is gathered through interviews, insight into management systems, and document analysis. One of the main results is the 21 areas identified for analysing today's practices by means of features for care chain effectiveness. Another main result is the four important concepts revealed through the operationalisation: Lead time, the episode of care from order to delivery, as the amount of time for patient cases between first contact with healthcare and the last Patient order fulfilment, fulfilment of patients' needs, broken down into several smaller steps performed over time within different care units in one or several organisations.

consisting of five sub processes order handling diagnosis treatment follow up and discharge True demand patients needs that is to be met and thus sets what care to deliver i e the production plan and the subordinate resource plan System boundaries defines which care units to include when focusing on the care delivery system s performance as a whole and should be more important than the performance and productivity of each individual care unit A number of direct suggestions for care chain improvement can also be found in the concluding remarks for example that objectives linked to economic influx or penalty narrow the system and that lead time data on an aggregated level is needed to cover episodes of care The theoretical contribution of the dissertation is to the field of logistics management through the methodological development of using these theories in a new context The managerial contribution is to healthcare managers through providing opportunities to improve care chains primarily by means of a greater understanding of care delivery systems

The Supporting Role of Logistics during the Early Stage of Retail Internationalisation Linnea Haag, 2019-03-08 Retail internationalisation refers to the establishment of retailers into foreign sales markets and is an important success factor for many retail chains Logistics has been acknowledged as an important prerequisite and key component of retail internationalisation enabling physical distribution to new foreign markets as well as ensuring customer satisfaction in terms of on time delivery and product availability Despite the recognition of logistics logistics managers struggle to adapt their logistics organisation and operations in order to efficiently and effectively support retail internationalisation due to the complexity of operating in multiple markets Previous research seldom mentions how logistics supports retail internationalisation especially when retail chains are at the beginning of their retail internationalisation journey By exploring the supporting role of logistics during the early stage of retail internationalisation retailers can better understand how logistics organisation and operations can be organised in order to successfully expand into foreign sales markets Therefore the purpose of this licentiate thesis is to Explore the supporting role of logistics during the early stage of retail internationalisation This licentiate thesis is based on an abductive multiple case study approach that combines empirical data with literature in an iterative process in order to explore the supporting role of logistics during the early stage of retail internationalisation The selected case companies were three large sized Swedish retail chains that have recently established themselves into nearby foreign sales markets The findings of this licentiate thesis suggest that logistics plays both a reactive and a proactive supporting role during the early stage of retail internationalisation. The reactive supporting role refers to logistics that adapts to predetermined conditions set by the retail company's top management team. As a reactive supporter, the logistics organisation is typically involved at an operational level and scales up its logistics operations in order to supply multiple markets. Beyond its reactive role, logistics can also play a proactive supporting role. This refers to its involvement at a strategic level within the retail company where it can influence the conditions of retail internationalisation. When logistics is involved more proactively, its operations can become better aligned with the other company operations involved in retail internationalisation. Furthermore, proactive logistics support enables more efficient and effective logistics that can better cope with increased complexity as well as more effectively keeping track of logistics costs. In addition to these findings, the importance of top management has been identified as a key aspect of proactive logistics support. More specifically, logistics competence within the top management team enables logistics to be prioritised at a strategic level and to be better integrated during retail internationalisation, including during individual establishments into new markets. The findings also suggest that the importance of logistics increases over time during retail internationalisation. The more markets the retailer enters, the more important efficient logistics becomes in order to deal with both complexity and logistics costs. By involving proactive logistics from the start of retail internationalisation, retail chains can more efficiently and effectively establish into and operate within foreign sales markets, which in turn supports a sustainable retail internationalisation. One of the main academic contributions of this licentiate thesis has been to study logistics in the specific context of retail internationalisation, which has previously not been researched in any great detail. In addition, logistics has often been studied as a static aspect, but in this thesis it is studied from a dynamic perspective in order to understand how its supporting role changes over time during the early stage of retail internationalisation. Another important contribution is that the role of logistics has been studied from both a strategic and an operational level, as previous research has mostly focused on the strategic level of logistics related to retail internationalisation. In terms of practical contributions, this licentiate thesis clarifies the logistics characteristics and supply chain capabilities that support the early stage of retail internationalisation. This licentiate thesis can also help practitioners to better prepare their logistics organisation and logistics operations for a future retail internationalisation, as well as helping them to avoid making logistical mistakes during the early stage of retail internationalisation.
