

CHAPTER 1

Cost Management and Strategic Decision Making Evaluating Opportunities and Leading Change

ANSWERS TO REVIEW QUESTIONS

- 1.1 Refer to the list of key terms at the end of Chapter 1 and the glossary.
- 1.2 The primary objective of cost management is to find opportunities for improvements in costs and customer value and to lead changes to achieve those opportunities.
- 1.3 The value chain is a way to describe relations among an organization's operations. The value chain describes how an organization assigns its resources to these operations and how one operation affects other operations. It is important for managers to understand the value chain because it can be the basis for competitive advantages and is the starting point for making improvements in the organization.
- 1.4 Strategic decision making involves obtaining and using resources to meet an organization's goals by exploiting its competitive advantages. Competitive advantages may be from lower cost operations, higher customer value, and ability to innovate. Examples of strategic decisions include a) outsourcing support services to gain a cost advantage, b) adding product features that customers value at low cost, and c) focusing resources on development or acquisition of new technology.
- 1.5 Cost management techniques include:
 - Comparing performance over time and against competitors
 - Benefit-cost analysis of plans and decision alternatives
 - Value-chain analysis of alternative resource arrangements and processes
 - Learning and educating others about the organization, its competitors, and its environment
 - Measuring the expected efficiency of acquiring and using resources in alternative operations
 - Identifying opportunities for improving the value and cost of new or existing products and services
 - Leading organizational change
 - Measuring actual outcomes of activities, products, and services
