Beyond Bach: Beethoven's Studies of Bach's Works

by Ortrun Cramer

All great Classical composers after Bach studied his works and learned from them, but no one succeeded, as Mozart and Beethoven did, in grasping and further developing Bach's science of composition in such a way, that something entirely new emerged, again pointing into the future.

Ludwig van Beethoven had been familiar with Bach's art of composition since his early youth. In 1783, an article appeared in Cramers Magazin der Musik, which stated that young Beethoven "could become a second Mozart." There was the well-known Baron Gottfried van Swieten, in whose house the musical elite of Vienna would gather every Sunday, and where, according to Mozart, "nothing was played but Handel and Bach," and whose library Mozart described as "although in quality a very large store of good music, yet in quantity a very small one." And there were more admirers of Bach among the musicians, poets, publishers, and personalities from the nobility and from economic life.

In an essay recently published in Fidelio magazine on "Moses Mendelssohn and the Bach Tradition," Steven Meyer points to the special role of the family of the Jewish banker Daniel Itzig from Berlin.¹ Frequent cultural gatherings at his house were attended by (among oth-
