

Drawing Conclusions

DIRECTIONS: Read each set of statements. Draw a conclusion about what is happening.

1. Your mother is in the kitchen cooking your lunch. She knocks on your bedroom door-says, "It's time to get up for school!" she says. "Don't make me come back up here-again!" her grown old roll over, pulling a pillow down over your head, and consider your options. Could you pretend to be sick? Would she believe you?

2. Your brother just got home from college. On your way downstairs, you hear your mother say, "Well that is a surprise. It's lovely to meet you." When you get down to the first, your mother is hiding in your brother's ear, "Why didn't you tell me? I look a mess. Fox are so uncomfortable?"

3. At the sound of your key in the door, your cat comes running. He greets you at the door, meowing, and rubbing himself against your legs. You look down at him in surprise. Henry isn't usually that glad to see you when you've been away all weekend. Then it occurs to you. Henry isn't so happy to see you, and you feel just awful.

4. The other students look away when they see Stanley in the hall. No one wants to attract his attention. And when someone does, the first thing everyone else thinks is thank God it's not me.

5. George never let his hand away from the teacher's desk. He rarely calls on her. She always has him in the air, trying to get his attention. He always calls on someone else.
