

Was the United States Justified in Going to War With Mexico?

Throughout its history the United States went to war with various Latin American countries. United States involvement in these wars was based on many important factors. Considered in the 19th century, when it was large (see below) were: the Monroe Doctrine, American imperialism, a desire to control the Gulf of Mexico and American (and English) oil. The majority of the country of Mexico was under the United States in 19th century. This led to the American-Mexican War. Was the United States justified in going to war with Mexico?

Key Characters:

James K. Polk, 11th President of the United States

General Winfield Scott, 18th President of the United States

General Zachary Taylor, 12th President of the United States
