Between Colonialism And Diaspora Between Tsdv:

From TT to T.O. Camille Hernández-Ramdwar, 2006 The diasporic and transnational construction of identities by migrants who make home in a new land has increasingly been the focus of interest and study by academics. However, the construction of identities by the offspring of these migrants, the second generation, has often been overlooked in the scholarship. Being born and/or raised in the diaspora, the experiences of identity among second generation experiences are very diverse, sometimes markedly different from the first generation's and at other times echoing the first generation's sentiments of a longing for home, nostalgia, and alienation. In this study, I examine identities and identity making among second generation people who are of Trinidadian descent living in Toronto. I combine in-depth interviews with key individuals along with textual analysis of sites in which identity is performed and expressed: Caribana, soca, fetes, websites, literature, as well as the consumption of music, food, and clothes. My objective is to address the complexities of identity formation and negotiation in a multicultural yet white dominant society such as Toronto. The study explores why and how certain individuals may choose to maintain and cultivate a distinct Trinidadian identity in a locale far removed from Trinidad while attending to the range of meanings they attach to being Trini. I argue that new forms of creolization that are occurring among second generation people in the diaspora are a continuation of a tradition fostered in the Caribbean experiences of colonialism, slavery, indentureship, and newer postcolonial transnationalisms. Shifting Continents / Colliding Cultures Radhika

Mohanram, 2000-01-31 In the wake of the steady expansion and more recent explosion of Anglo-Indian and Indo-Anglian writing and following the success of Salman Rushdie's Midnight's Children, the literature of the Indian diaspora has become the object of close attention. As a body of literature, it simultaneously represents an important multicultural perspective within individual national literatures such as those of Canada or Australia, as well as a more global perspective taking in the phenomena of transculturalism and diaspora. However, while readers may share an interest in the writing of the Indian diaspora, they do not always interpret the notion of Indian diaspora in the same way. Indeed, there has been much debate in recent years about the appropriateness of terms such as diaspora and exile. Should these terms be reserved for the specifically historical nature of problems encountered in the process of acquiring new nationality and citizenship, or can they be extended to the writing of literature itself, or used to describe economic migration arising out of privilege? As a response to these debates, Shifting Continents / Colliding Cultures explores the aftermath of British colonialism on the Indian subcontinent and Sri Lanka, including the resulting diaspora. The essays also examine zones of intersection between theories of postcolonial writing and models of diaspora and the nation. Particular lines of investigation include how South Asian identity is negotiated in Western spaces and its reverse, how Western identity is negotiated in South Asian space, reading identity by privileging history, the role of diasporic women in the Western nation, how diaspora affects the literary canon, and how diaspora is used in the production of alternative identities in films such as Gurinder Chadha's Bhaji on the Beach.
