- This anatomical diagram illustrates the human heart, highlighting its internal chambers, valves, and major blood vessels. The heart is shown in a frontal cross-section, revealing the four chambers: the Right Atrium and Right Ventricle on the left side of the image, and the Left Atrium and Left Ventricle on the right side. The Right Atrium receives deoxygenated blood from the Superior Vena Cae and Inferior Vena Cae, while the Right Ventricle pumps it into the Pulmonary Artery. The Left Atrium receives oxygenated blood from the Pulmonary Vein, and the Left Ventricle pumps it into the Aorta. The diagram also shows the Tricuspid Valve between the Right Atrium and Ventricle, the Mitral Valve between the Left Atrium and Ventricle, and the Aortic Valve at the base of the Aorta. The Pericardium is shown as the outermost layer surrounding the heart. Arrows indicate the direction of blood flow: entering the atria, moving through the valves into the ventricles, and then being pumped out to the lungs and the rest of the body.

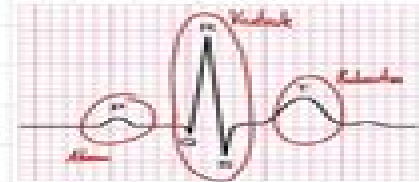

The diagram illustrates the human circulatory system, showing the flow of blood between the heart, lungs, and the rest of the body. The heart is centrally located, with four chambers: the right and left atria and ventricles. The pulmonary circulation (top loop) is shown in red, with blood flowing from the right ventricle to the lungs and returning to the left atrium. The systemic circulation (bottom loop) is shown in blue, with blood flowing from the left ventricle to the rest of the body and returning to the right atrium. A legend at the bottom left identifies the colors: red for oxygenated blood, blue for deoxygenated blood, and a mix of red and blue for mixed blood. Labels include 'Pulmonary Circulation', 'Systemic Circulation', 'Right Atrium', 'Left Atrium', 'Right Ventricle', and 'Left Ventricle'. Arrows indicate the direction of blood flow.
