Simulation P. Bratley, B. L. Fox, L. E. Schrage, 2012-12-06 Simulation means driving a model of a system with suitable inputs and observing the corresponding outputs. It is widely applied in engineering, in business, and in the physical and social sciences. Simulation methodology draws on computer science, statistics, and operations research and is now sufficiently developed and coherent to be called a discipline in its own right. A course in simulation is an essential part of any operations research or computer science program. A large fraction of applied work in these fields involves simulation; the techniques of simulation as tools are as fundamental as those of linear programming or compiler construction. For example, simulation sometimes appears deceptively easy, but perusal of this book will reveal unexpected depths. Many simulation studies are statistically defective, and many simulation programs are inefficient. We hope that our book will help to remedy this situation. It is intended to teach how to simulate effectively. A simulation project has three crucial components, each of which must always be tackled: 1. data gathering, model building, and validation; 2. statistical design and estimation; 3. programming and implementation. Generation of random numbers. Chapters 5 and 6 pervade simulation, but unlike the three components above, random number generators need not be constructed from scratch for each project. Usually, random number packages are available. That is one reason why the chapters on random numbers, which contain mainly reference material, follow the chapters dealing with experimental design and output analysis.

Remote Sensing Techniques Aid in Preattack Planning for Fire Management Lucy Anne Salazar, 1982 Remote sensing techniques were investigated as an alternative for documenting selected preattack fire planning information. Locations of fuel models, road systems, and water sources were recorded by Landsat satellite imagery and aerial photography for a portion of the Six Rivers National Forest in northwestern California. The two fuel model groups used were from the 1978 National Fire Danger Rating System and the Northern Forest Fire Laboratory. Landsat-derived fuel model data were digitized and computer-analyzed by unsupervised and guided clustering techniques to produce a fuel model map of the area. Overall Landsat classification accuracies of fuel models were moderate (71 percent). This was mainly due to the incompatibilities found between fuel model descriptions and remote sensing capabilities. The results suggest, however, that a basic preattack plan that is moderately reliable, quickly attainable, and easily updated is feasible by applying remote sensing techniques.
