Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the cardiovascular and metabolic responses to a 1000-m swim. Ten subjects were randomly assigned to a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of 12 weeks of 1000-m swim training. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and a training group. The control group consisted of five subjects who did not participate in the training program. The training group consisted of five subjects who participated in the training program. The subjects were tested at baseline and after 12 weeks of training. The tests included a 1000-m swim, a 1000-m run, and a 1000-m walk. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly lower heart rates and oxygen consumption during the 1000-m swim compared to the control group. The training group also had significantly lower heart rates and oxygen consumption during the 1000-m run and 1000-m walk compared to the control group. The results of the study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular and metabolic responses to a 1000-m swim.

These data show that the use of the word "and" in the sentence "The cat sat on the mat and the dog lay on the rug" is not a simple matter of concatenation. The word "and" is used to connect two clauses, but the meaning of the sentence is not simply the sum of the two clauses.
