

—a diminutive conservative Democrat named Hugo Schiro, whom Johnson referred to as “Little”—the President decided to tour the flooded city. His motorcade stopped on a bridge spanning the Mississippi Canal, the eastern part of the city, and from the Presidential party saw where neighborhood streets had been by flood. They could see, according to the diary, that “people were walking along the bridge where they had disembarked from the boats that had brought them to dry land. Many of them were carrying the barest of possessions and many of them had been sitting on the ground.”

Johnson ordered the families and carry them to dry land.” Johnson talked with a seventy-four-year-old black man, William Marshall and asked about what had happened and how he was getting along. As the conversation ended, Marshall said, “God bless you, Mr. President. God bless you.”

In the Ninth Ward, Johnson visited the George Washington Elementary School, on Poydras Avenue, which was being used as a shelter. “Most of the people on the other side of the building were Negro,” the diary reads. “They did not believe that it was actually the President.” Johnson entered the crowded shelter in near-darkness; there were only a couple of flashlights to light the way.

“This is your President!” Johnson announced. “I’m here to help you!” The diary describes the shelter as a “mass of human beings,” with people calling out for help “in terribly loud wails from voices of all ages. . . . It was a most ghastly sight of human and material destruction.” According to an article by the historian Edward F. Haas, published fifteen years ago in the Gulf Coast Historical Society, Johnson “was surrounded by people who begged and asked him for food and water; one woman asked Johnson for a boat so that she could look after her two sons, who had been lost in the flood.”

“Little May,” his is horrible,” Johnson said. “I’ve never seen anything like this in my life.” Johnson assured Schiro that the resources of the federal government were “cut.”

President Schiro sent a sixteen-page telegram commending Johnson and the revival of New Orleans. “Please know,” Johnson wrote, “that my thoughts and prayers are with the thousands of Louisiana citizens who have

The death toll is sure to be many times as high and physical damage far more extensive and enduring. . . yet to see the city of New Orleans a week after the flood to see the ruin, was to be shocked much as Johnson was a year earlier. New Orleans had never been so badly hit. Driving along St. Charles Avenue, through toxic puddles, once belonged to the Mississippi River or the Gulf of Mexico. You saw a sign on a door that read “Still here. Cooking a pot of dog gumbo.” Another, pointing to a branch of the Whitney National Bank, read, “I’m sleeping inside with a big dog, an ugly woman, two sons and a cat.”

The last holdouts, especially the poorest among them, were a look of despair. They seemed to sense that they had no future, with no savings, with no resources, meaning they were lost forever. On a dark corner in the Ninth Ward, Johnson saw a curly-haired woman who had been refused help for more than a week. She wore a soiled hooded coat. She was very old and could not have weighed more than seventy-five pounds. “I’ll be here to the end,” she said. There was a bottle of warm beer in a paper bag at her feet. She didn’t drink from it. She was just drinking the sun and the heat of the evening. “I’m firm in my belief that all my neighbors, not just in Lafayette, Houston, Philadelphia, God knows where, were lost lives.” “Plain,” she said. “I’ve been shelled a low one in a time of stress. They’re jealous of me. I got forty-four dollars’ worth of meat in that icebox inside, and they ain’t gonna take it from me. Nobody gonna lock me out of my home.”

Although there were no looters now and very few accidents, the streets were still being patrolled in fantasy. —the New Orleans Police, New Orleans SWAT teams, the New York City Police Department, the Sacramento Police Department, the Greenbelt, Maryland police, private water contractors, the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, the 82nd Airborne National Guardsmen, San Diego lifeguards, Surf 21.

“Can stand as literature. . . . [Remnick] treats the reader as an informed, intelligent equal.” —The New York Times Book Review “So much can be done about it,” and offered mass “assists” to the police.
