

RESEARCH BRIEF | MAY 2017

The Effects of the Low-Income Housing Tax Credit (LIHTC)

The Low-Income Housing Tax Credit (LIHTC) Program is the largest federal subsidy for the development and preservation of affordable housing. Since it was established by the Tax Reform Act of 1986, LIHTC has financed the development and preservation of more than 2.1 million units in over 28,000 developments across the country.¹ LIHTC is currently the federal government's primary subsidy for the new construction and preservation of affordable housing, and is projected to cost (in tax revenue forgone) $7.9 billion in 2016. As federal tax reform looms, however, there is growing uncertainty surrounding the future of LIHTC.

Given the bipartisan support for reform and even expansion of the LIHTC, the credit itself may survive any tax reform efforts.² However, the President's current tax reform proposal to lower the corporate tax rate to 15 percent from 35 percent may render the tax credit much less valuable as a mechanism for financing affordable housing going forward.³ In short, a lower tax liability means less need for corporations to purchase tax credits, and therefore will drive down the value of LIHTC and a range of other federal tax credit programs. According to recent news, the hint of comprehensive tax reform has already led to a slowdown in closings on LIHTC developments.⁴

In contemplation of debate about these possible changes, this brief explores what we know about who LIHTC serves and what research has shown about the impact of the program.

1 The dataset includes 28,489 projects and 1,014,360 units placed in service between 1990 and 2014. The average number of units per property and the distribution of property size are both calculated based on the 28,489 properties with a known number of units, and not the full universe of 28,489 properties. The database contains missing data for number of units (0.3%), qualifying ratio percentage of tax credit units (7.4%), and bedroom count (23.2%). Totals may not sum to 100 percent because of rounding.

2 The Affordable Housing Credit Improvement Act of 2017 (H.R. 5483), also referred to as the Cardwell-Hatch bill, has been introduced and has bipartisan support in the U.S. Senate. A version of the Act has been introduced in the U.S. House of Representatives that does not include expansion of the program.
