

CONTRAST

Unique elements should look different from each other—that is called contrast. Contrast between elements creates emphasis and visual interest. Adding some contrast is important, but if you make all the elements look too different from each other, the composition will look random and lack any unity.

BALANCE

Balance refers to the distribution of elements within a composition. Your compositions should look visually balanced, unless you want it to look chaotic and the viewer to be unsettled. Consider that elements have visual weight when you attempt to balance a composition.

FOCAL POINT EMPHASIS

When you emphasize an element—by using contrast, placement, etc.—you are creating a focal point, which will lead the viewer's eye to the area that you desire. The order in which you see elements is called visual hierarchy.

MOVEMENT

The placement of elements can create the look and feeling of action and to guide the viewer's eye throughout the composition. This eye movement is required to create visual hierarchy.

RHYTHM PATTERN

Also referred to as REPETITION, the principle of RHYTHM indicates movement while the placement of repeated elements in a composition results in a PATTERN. Visual rhythm results in a sense of unity, as well as creates eye movement.

SCALE PROPORTION

You can't tell that an element is big unless you place it next to something that is small. Scale refers to the relationship of certain elements to the whole and to each other.

UNITY

Elements look unified when you accent their similarities. In order for a composition to look unified, all the elements should look like they belong together even if they're not exactly the same.

THESE ARE THE ESSENTIAL TOOLS FOR CREATING ENGAGING & EFFECTIVE PIECES OF GRAPHIC DESIGN & ART

ELEMENTS & PRINCIPLES of DESIGN

LINE

A line is a mark between two points. They can vary from straight to squiggly, but the line/stroke weight can also vary to show contrast.

SPACE

Space is the area around or between elements in design. Related elements can be placed together to show unity. Unrelated elements can be placed apart to emphasize those surrounded by more negative space.

SHAPE

There are two (2) types of shapes:

GEOMETRIC—shapes that are usually man-made (squares, circles, etc.)

ORGANIC—shapes exist in nature (curved, irregular, etc.)

FORM

Form is when an element is three-dimensional and enclosed volume—it includes height, width, and depth.

VALUE

Value is how light or dark an element looks—everything from dark to white. Use value to create depth, to create a pattern, to lead the eye (visual hierarchy) or to emphasize an element.

COLOR

Color is used to generate emotions, create visual interest and create emphasis.

ACTIVE colors are bright and more likely to catch the viewer's eye.
PASSIVE colors are more neutral and blend in and tend to have a calming effect.

TEXTURE

Texture relates to the physical surface, but also includes the visual appearance of an element—for example, you can create texture by adding a pattern or using distressed type.

SIZE

Size refers to the actual dimensions of an element. Scale (Principle) can be used when you're trying to create emphasis on an element or area.
