

Science Notebooks in Grades 3–6

Student notebook from the Energy and Electromagnetism Module

Enrico Fermi's laboratory notebook, 1941

INTRODUCTION

A scientist's notebook is a detailed record of his or her engagement with natural phenomena. It is a personal representation of experiences, observations, and thinking—an integral part of the process of doing scientific work. A scientist's notebook is a continuously updated history of the development of scientific knowledge and reasoning. FOSS students are young scientists; they incorporate notebooks into their science learning.

This chapter is designed to be a resource for teachers who are incorporating notebooks into their classroom practice. For teachers just beginning to use notebooks, the Getting Started section in this chapter suggests how to set up the notebooks, and the Investigations Guide cues you when to engage students with the notebooks during the investigation. For more information on specific types of notebook entries, the subsections in the Notebook Components section include strategies to differentiate instruction for various ability levels.
