

Cardiovascular System

BLOOD

- Blood is one component of the cardiovascular system, which also consists of the heart and the blood vessels.

Functions of Blood

Blood helps maintain homeostasis in several ways:

1. Transport of gases, nutrients, and waste products.
 - The blood transports ingested nutrients, ions, and water from the digestive tract to the cells, and the blood transports the cells' waste products to the kidneys for elimination.
2. Transport of processed molecules
 - Many substances are produced in one part of the body and transported in the blood to another part, where they are modified.
3. Transport of regulatory molecules
 - The blood carries the hormones and many of the enzymes that regulate body processes from one part of the body to another.
4. Regulation of pH and osmosis
 - Buffers, which help keep the blood's pH within its normal range of 7.35–7.45, are in the blood. The osmotic composition of blood is also critical for maintaining normal fluid and ion balance.
5. Maintenance of body temperature.
 - Movement of warm blood from the interior of the body, to its surface where heat is released, is one of several mechanisms that help regulate body temperature.
6. Protection against foreign substances
 - Certain cells and chemicals in the blood make up an important part of the immune system, protecting against foreign substances, such as microorganisms and toxins.
7. Clot formation
 - When blood vessels are damaged, blood clotting protects against excessive blood loss. When tissues are damaged, the blood clot that forms is also the first step in tissue repair and the restoration of normal function.

Composition of Blood

Blood is a type of connective tissue consisting of a liquid matrix containing cells and cell fragments.

- The liquid matrix is the plasma, and the cells and cell fragments are the formed elements.
- The plasma makes up 55% of the total blood volume, and the formed elements make up 45%.
- The total blood volume in the average adult is about 4–5 L in females and 5–6 L in males.
- Blood makes up about 8% of the total weight of the body.

Plasma

- the liquid part of blood
- It is a pale-yellow fluid that consists of about 91% water and 9% other substances, such as proteins, ions, nutrients, gases, waste products, and regulatory substances.
- Plasma is a colloid, which is a liquid containing suspended substances that do not settle out of solution. Most of the suspended substances are plasma proteins.
