Deborah Lipstadt reaches for one of history's most haunting examples to answer an almost unanswerable question: "The Overton Window has shifted on what can be openly said about Deborah Lipstadt got 44 countries and four major multilateral organizations including the European Union and the UN." "We're not the radical protesting liberals that people assume that we are." Rachel Fried discusses the pragmatic approach to Jewish political engagement. This discussion delves into the question of why many Jewish voters lean left politically, while Orthodox Deborah Lipstadt explains why she no longer sees antisemitism as a simple left to right spectrum. In this clip from Being Jewish: Listen to this and other episodes at www.joidenver.com/podcasts In this episode of Dear Rabbi, I tackle a fascinating paradox: if Jews have benefited greatly from capitalism, contributed disproportionately to socialist movements, why have they not become more radical? Why have the Jewish people, who seem to have benefited greatly from capitalism, contributed disproportionately to socialist movements?
